INTRODUCTION

In an organization, both formal and non-formal organizations, of course, have a vision and mission that become the basis for moving an organization to achieve its goals. In achieving goals and improving the performance of an organization, a leader has a great influence on the performance of subordinates in terms of directing, influencing and motivating subordinates (Akib & Darwis, 2015; Jumriani et al., 2015; Prasetyawati & Baharuddin, 2016; Sudaryono, 2014; Wirawan, 2013). Leadership in an organization, including bureaucracy, is very important, this can be seen from several opinions, including: (Pasolong, 2014) argues that "Without leadership, an organization is a disorganized, chaotic collection of people and machines."

Kartasasmita in (Pasolong, 2014), stated that leadership is very important and very decisive in the life of every nation, because the progress and decline of society, the ups and downs of the nation, are determined by its leader. The role of the leader is very important in an organization to achieve predetermined goals and has a great influence on the success or failure of an organization, be it bureaucracy in government.

As a leader in a bureaucratic organization, he acts as an administrator in decision making. Leaders in bureaucratic organizations are appointed by authorized officials, therefore in practice it is possible for an official to act only as a leader and not a leader (Ismail, 2017; Niswaty & Darwis, 2015; Rivai & Mulyadi, 2012; Sumardianti, 2016). In government organizations, such as the Soppeng Regency Population and Civil Registry Office. Leaders must be able to direct, coordinate and influence their employees in terms of carrying out tasks, responsibilities and others so that organizational goals can be achieved.

The Population and Civil Registration and implementation of regional policies in the field of national unity and politics. The bureaucratic system is implemented with the aim that the implementation of work can run effectively and efficiently (Dwiyanto, 2018; Articleong, 2013; Siahaan, 2014; Yusriadi, 2018). However, based on research results, employee productivity is not as expected. There are many things such as employee work results that are not as expected, delayed and often inefficient work, and others. This of course returns to the leader as a figure who directs the work of subordinates so that organizational goals can be achieved. If the leader does not act as it should, then the bureaucracy that should be the ideal system will turn into a convoluted and impractical process that will ultimately reduce organizational productivity.

Based on the background of the problem above, the problem that will be discussed in this study is formulated, namely how is the Bureaucratic Leadership applied by the Head of the Soppeng Regency Population and Civil Registry Office?

METHOD

This research took place at the Office of Population and Civil Registry of Soppeng Regercy. This study uses descriptive research that describes the form of bureaucratic leadership of the Flead of the Population and Civil Registry Office of Soppeng Regency, while the data analysis used is descriptive analysis, namely the analysis used to describe or describe the data that has been collected using the Frequency Distribution Table.

The population in this study were all employees of the Population and Civil Registry Office of Soppeng Regency, as many as 28 people. And the sampling technique used is a saturated sample which is used to determine the entire member that is used as a sample (Sugiyono, 2017). Thus, me sample used in this study were all employees of the North Toraja National and Political Unity Agency, as many as 28 people.

In this study, the authors used two data collection techniques, namely: 1) Observation, carried out by observing directly the Head of the Soppeng Regency Population and Civil Registry Office in carrying out their duties as office leaders. 2) Questionnaire, distributing a list of questions in writing to the employees of the Soppeng Regency Population and Civil Registry Office.

RESEARCH RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

Based on the Approved Rules

In government agencies there are rules, main tasks and procedures that have been established and approved to be a reference in carrying out their duties as leaders. The implementation of the rules becomes very important considering that bureaucratic organizations are administrative-oriented organizations. To find out the description of the application of the rules by the leadership, it can be seen through the following respondents' responses: The leader acts in accordance with the main duties of the function and the applicable rules/procedures.
